

Contributors to this Issue

PETER CLARK is Professor of Organization Theory at Queen Mary, University of London.

STEWART CLEGG is a well-known academic in organization studies, sociology and politics, who has published many books and articles. He works at the University of Technology, Sydney and has visiting appointments at Maastricht Universiteit, Aston, Vrije Universiteit, Amsterdam and Copenhagen Business School.

TOM MANDEVILLE is Senior Lecturer in Economics, University of Queensland, Australia.

JASON POTTS is Associate Professor of Economics, University of Queensland, Australia.

TIM RAY works on knowledge and innovation at the Open University Business School in the UK. Before joining the Open University, he spent more than seven years working in Japan for Japanese organizations.

SCOTT TAYLOR is a Lecturer in Organizational Behaviour at Birmingham Business School, University of Birmingham, UK.

BERTRAND VENARD is a Professor at Nantes School of Management in France, and a Research Fellow at Wharton Business School, University of Pennsylvania, USA

CRAIG S. WEBSTER is a member of the Compucology Project, PO Box 25-380, Christchurch, New Zealand and a Research Fellow at the Auckland University School of Medicine, New Zealand.